Most of them knew a single word processing program, but they were clearly lacking basic technical knowledge of contemporary publishing and editing. They knew broad literary history, but they lacked any knowledge of the intellectual heritage of rhetoric or writing theory. Based on a 1991 assessment study of the English writing major, new requirements were established in 1992. English writing majors were required to take a course on the history of rhetorical theory, a course in computer-aided publishing, and a senior capstone writing portfolio course. English writing majors also had to complete an area of advanced studies in one of three areas available at Millikin: creative writing, journalism or professional writing and publishing. The professional writing internship continued to be a strong experiential learning component of the major.

In 1995 based on MPSL guidelines for majors, the English writing major went through additional enhancements. One of the frustrations of writing students was the popularity of writing and publishing courses. Seniors and honors students from all majors often completely filled sections before sophomore or junior writing majors could enroll. Writing majors were frustrated by having to wait until their junior year to start study in their major. This led to two reforms: (1) English majors were pre-enrolled in English sections

Professional writing students often serve as editors and designers for such as the English Department newsletter, the Projector, and other campus publications.

These advanced opportunities for integrating theory and practice prepare our writing majors for a variety of professional opportunities in the future. Employing their advanced writing, editing, and publishing skills in the service of others, writing majors often complete professional writing Internships in the community for a wide range of business and non-profit organizations.

In the spring of the junior year, all writing majors come together to take the course, Applying
